There is a good deal of abuse heaped upon Americans for sins of omission and commission performed while traveling in Europe, but it is to be set down to their credit that the American travelers are said to have been the coolest and most self-possessed class during the recent earthquakes. Their superiority to fear was marked and commented on all sides.

It is impossible not to admire the pluck of the Mayor of Nice, France, who undertook to restore the confidence of the frightened people by giving his official assurance immediately after the recent carthquake that the worst was over, and that they had nothing more to fear. A Mayor who can guarantee a city against an earthquake shock is a Mayor worth having.

The managers of the International Jubilee of railways at Paris are actively engaged in preparing for the opening. Now a scientific person has explained why Hanlan is the great rower that he is. Dr. Sargent, of the Harvard gymnasium, hee examined him, and says that he has "a great head and an excellent body all the way down to the legs." Judged by a standard of perfection the oarsman's legs and arms are too short. Dr. Sargent says that this defect has made Hanlan the oarsman he is, and that the power from the shoulders, back and loins, together with the immense leverage given by the short legs and arms, is what has mad him almost the perfection in build for a sculler.

The people of Dodge City, Kansas, are now marveling over the discovery of a large bone, which has recently been brought into that city from a point about sixty-five miles southwest, near the Cimarron river. This mammoth fossil was unearthed by some workmen while digging a well at the depth of about fortyfive feet, and below a stratum of sandstone. The length of this colossal femur is about 6 feet 8 1-2 inches; weight, 96 pounds circumference of shaft, 20 inches; head of bone, (femur,) 24 inches in circumference; lower end or knee, 89 inches in circumference. Further excavations will be made at an early date with the hope of discovering the entire skeleton.

Do you know that people like to be humbugged?" asked a physician of a Philadelphia Call reporter. "It's a fact, and a large percentage of the practice of the most successful doctors is pure humbuggery. A great many people are filled with immaginary aches and pains. They've had them for years in their imagination, and have grown to regard them with a tenacious affection. When they consult a physician about them they do not like to have the matter peoh-poohed. They do not wish to be told there is nothing the matter with them. They want to be told they are sick; to be sympathized with, and to be prescribed for. They then pay the fee willingly. Some of the best and most persistent patients I have are as sound as a dollar. I listen to their recital of their symptoms right along, prescribe some harmless as well as useless dose and charge it in my little bill. It is to this little diplomacy of mine that I attribute much of my success."

The Department of Agriculture reports an increase in the total number of horses, mules, cows and oxen owned in this country as compared with last year. The greatest increase, says Bradstreet, is shown in oxen, while mules show a slight excess over last year. In the case of sheep and hogs considerable decreases are shown. The following table shows the total number at this time and at a corresponding period last year:

Stock.	1886.	1887.
Horses	12,077,657	12,496,74
Mules	2,052,593	1,117,14
Milch cows	14,235,388	14,552,08
Oxen and other cattle.	31,275,242	33,511,75
Sheep	48,322,331	44,759,31
Swine	46,092,043	44,612,83
As to values, the decl	ine has not	been very large, being greatest	in the case	of cattle which show the large	st increase	in num ber. Horses, sheep and hogs have increased in value, while mules have slightly decreased. The total values of the various classes of animals are shown in the following:

The total value of all the farm animals of the country is placed at $2,400,586,938, an increase of $35,427,076 over this time last year. The greater share of the increase is due to the increased number and value of horses. The decline in the value of cows has been charged chiefly to the low price of butter,

THE CZAR'S DANGER.

An Attempt to Assassinate the Emperor of Russia.

Men With Bombs Lying in Wait For the Imperial Carriage.

Reports from St. Petersburg regarding the discovery of a great plot against the Czar caused much excitement at Berlin. There is a disposition in German circles to regard the whole plot as an attempt to force the Czar to make war instead of peacably dividing Bulgaria with Austria. The Berlin Post, a semigaria with Austria. The Berlin Fost, a semiofficial organ, expresses this feeling as follows:
"With alarm and grief we say it: Europe must guard itself against the policy of despair which may show itself in fatalistic quiet or convulsive boldness. The last is the more probable. It is thought here that the plot makes clear Russia's hitherto unexplained delay in carrying out the Bulgarian partition agreement with Austria."

The latest authentic intelligence from St.

Petersburg as to the attempt on the Czar shows that the bomb, which was to have been thrown under the imperial carriage, was con-cealed in a case shape I like a book of quarto size. The young man who carried it was a student. A string was hanging from the case, and it was by means of this that the bomb was to have been flung.

A man who was standing behind the stunoticed that the latter's book seemed very heavy and that he repeatedly shifted it from arm to arm. This male him suspicious, and he drew the attention of a bystander to the young man. Hardly had he done so when he saw the young min stoop, deposit his book on the pavement and fumble at the string.

Luckily the string slipped from the wouldbe regicide's hand and the man who had been observing him, caught him by the collar and shoved him back violently into the crowd. It was seen then that another youth, who had been standing beside the one with the book, was making lough efforts to force his way through the surging mass of people who had been attracted by the arrest of the first man. This second youth had a traveling bag slung about him. He was seized, too, and his bag was afterward found to contain a bomb.

It is said the Czar heard nothing of the hole matter until he reached Gatschina, to which place he has gone with the Empress and their son. The Czar shed tears on being informed of the danger which not only him-self but the Empress and their son had so nar-

RIOT AT A BULL FIGHT

Violence at a Matador's Debut in the City of Mexico.

A Mob, Disappointed in Its Cruel Sport, Storms the Arena.

The City of Mexico has been the scene of a terrific riot at the debut of Luis Mazzantini a noted Spanish matador imported from Havana at a cost of $16,000. His first appear ance was celebrated as a holiday in the Mexi can Capital, and for a hundred miles around. A dispatch gives the following account of the cruel "sport," and the attendant riot, created by disappointed spectators:

The rush for seats began hours before the sport began, and fully 60,000 people, circled sport began, and fully by a cordon of Federal troops, occupied the plaza when Mazzantini appeared. The first bull, a heavy, dark one, was received with great cheers. A signal attack by a picador, however, proved the worthlessness of the bull, for he was not quick to charge, and the crowd yelled: "A fuera!" ("Away with him!") The bull stood still, and acted entirely on the defensive, and at last threw a horse and rider, throwing the horse over his haunches and on top of the rider. The bull jumped the outer barrier, which circles a ring smaller than that of Puebla, so that the brute could scarcely turn, and immediately returned to the arena, where the planting of the banderillas elicited enthu-siasm. Mazzantini now took the sword and the first thrust. It went clear to the With two and a half feet of stee in his body the bull rushed around the arcna close to the barrier, and one of the spectators withdrew the sword, but it was soon after plunged to the hilt again by Mazzantini. But the bull still gave and the champion was at last obliged to sever the spinal cord, which he did by a single touch behind the horns.

The second bull was equally worthless The banderillas were planted and Prieto Diego, in a uniform of vermilion red and gold were given, but the bull did not charge, and motions of disgust were given by the a ors. The bull would not leave the bar-and died while circling it.

The horse whose abdomen was pierced en-The horse whose abdomen was pierced en-tered the ring for a third encounter. The ab-domen had been sewed up and enormous swellings appeared. The crowd yelled with indignation, but the horse and rider remained. The horse was attacked by the black and white bull, which had entered, and at the second attack the seams were torn open and the intestines again protruded. The horses were called by the judge, the banderillas were planted, and Mazzantini, amid expressions of the extremest disgust from the crowd, who were disastisfied with the inferior quality of the bull, thrust the sword deep into the lunes. Bload thrust the sword deep into the lungs. Blood rushed from the mouth. The bull fell on his breast, but turned round and round on his hind legs to meet his adversaries, by whom he was surrounded, and at last settled down The spectators voiced their disgust freely and it increased as three other bulls were proved to be poltroons. They hissed the matador and management, they hurled chairs at the bull. Luis took one of the hundreds of chairs flung into the arena and hit the bull on the head. Then the crowd jumped into the arena and pursued the bull with chairs and flagstaffs, breaking them into fragments. The bull was killed, and a rain of chairs succeeded. The crowd in the upper galleries began to tear the woodwork to pieces and ling it into the air, and the wildest confusion prevailed. The soldiers with drawn bayonet were deployed around the amphitheatre, while the officers rushed to and fro, vainly trying to suppress the excitement and quell the disturbance, which had now become general. On the top of the gallery a company of soldiers promenaded with drawn bayonets, but there was no chance to charge on the crowd. Several arrests were made by the officers, who were mingling with the crowd and closely watching the movements of individuals. As quickly as possible the bayonets cleared the benches, and then the soldiers were deployed into a triangle in double file inside the entrance. Here and there chairs were flung from the calleries, not now into the arena, but among the soldiers, and officers with swords in their hands rushed up the stairs to arrest the offenders. The crowd hooted the officers and demanded the release of the prisoners, but the latter were borne away, despite the loudly uttered protests. Detachments the loudly uttered protests. Detachments of cavalry with drawn sabres blocked the street crossings and the bayonets of the infantry glistened in the red light of the charcoal fires kept burning by the street venders. The ladies had not yet been able to escape and were hemmed in by the growd. Suddenly there was a movement from beyond, where the crowd was the thickest, and men and women were separated by a charge of the mounted troops, to which some one had given offense. The culprit and some of his companions were struck with sabre and placed under arrest, and again the soldiers resnmed their positions.

The mob howled and raged, and cries of denunciation against the matador and the manager were heard far and near. The sol-diers charged the crowd gathered in the streets, and hundreds of heads were slashed with sabres. Finally the troops were in sol cossession.

The prices of admission were enormous, $8 peing the lowest rate for reserved seats. stimated receipts were $150,000.

RAILROAD SLAUGHTER.

More Than 100 Persons Killed or Injured Near Boston. A railroad bridge disaster, even more extensive in its destruction of life and limb than the recent Central Vermont horror, befell a suburban train on the Boston and Providence Railroad Monday morning. The collapse of an iron bridge beneath a train dashed six cars to pieces on the highway, fifty feet below. Of about two hundred people who went down in the wreck twenty-three were instantly killed, or died soon after, fifteen were reported dying and eighty were severely hurt. The prompt summons of a Fire De-partment detail prevented the additional hor-ror of fire, and the victims suffered death or ror of fire, and the victims suffered death or injury only by mutilation.

The accident happened at a bridge over Spring street, on the Dedham branch, in West Roxbury District, about five miles from Boston Common. The train left Dedham at 7 o'clock, and consisted of an engin and nine cars in charge of Conductor W. H. Alden and Assistants Myron Tilden and Web

About 300 persons were on board and were pretty well distributed in the several cars. In retty well distributed in the several cars. In less than two minutes after leaving Roslindale station the engine crossed the bridge, and a second later Engineer White found that his train had parted, and looking back was horrified to see that the bridge had gone and several of the cars had disappeared. He immediately stopped his engine, and found that three cars were remainted to the carbon to the contract of the carbon service and the combangement and the contract of the carbon service. ing on the embankment and the other six were in the highway below. He then sounded the whistle, and ran his locomotive ahead to Forest Hills, the junction with the main line

The first man to reach the wreck was J. H. Lannon, a fish dealer. He was driving up from Forest Hills toward the scene of the disaster when the engine of the wrecked train came down the track whistling wildly. The locomotive slowed down on the Forest Hills crossing, and Lannon stopped his team, shouting to the engineer: "What's the matter?"
"My train has gone through Tin Bridge. Telegraph to Boston," was the reply.

Lannon ran to the station with the m which was quickly flashed over the wires. Then he hastened back to his team and drove op the road to the wreck. When he reached it the cries and groans were coming from all parts of the awful heap. Bruised and wounded people were crawling out from the pile. He found an axe and climbed upon a car that lay in the trench, two others being beneath it. He thought most of the cries of the injured came from this car. He crawled through a windo and went to work. A woman first demanded his attention. She was pinned down by the feet, and two seats and the body of a man lay upon her. The body and the seats were soon got out of the way. Working on the wood and iron that held her down caused her to scream with fresh agony, and it was some moments before she was released. Launon dragged her to a window, and two men helped him lift her out. Four men, three of them dead, and two women were taken from this car by these three men. By this time the firemen had arthree men. By this time the firemen had arrived, and they, with the uninjured from the wreck, were hard at work, first rescuing the imprisoned ones who were injured, and afterward digging out the dead from the shape less tangled debris. ward digging out the dead from the snapeless tangled debris.

There were a score or Riore men on the train whose injuries were so slight that they were able to go to the assistance of their fellow passengers after the first moments of paralyzing horror. Those who could be rescued at all were got out in a few minutes, and the search for the dead was prosecuted with less haste.
At only one point did fire appear—in the upturned wreck of the smoking car, the last on the train. A stream from a chemical engine quickly quenched the flames. It was a scene quickly quenched the flames. It was a scene of horror for about an hour. Dead, dying, and badly injured were strewn upon the ground just as the rescuers placed them in the first haste to get them from the ruins. At the botters of the street tom of the embankment, near one abutment lay the mutilated bodies of seven girls in row. Indeed, fully half the killed and injure were shop girls who were on their way to their work. There were many brave girls among the injured, for they bore their sufferings without moan or complaint after they had been taken from the ruins. Surgeons from the neighborhood arrived very promptly, and within an hour all the appliances necessary for such an emergency were at the scene. The six cars which lay in the chasm be tween the two abutments formed a pile of wreckage about 40 feet long by about 100 feet wide. Most of the casualties were in the first three cars that fell. The fifth car of the train lay in a heap, with the splinters of the fourth car beneath it. Both ends of the car were gone.

This is the first serious accident that has ever occurred on the Boston and Providence Road or its branches, and its effect was felt in the stock market, the stock dropping of about seven points, or an equivalent for $300, 000, which it is expected that the disaster will cost the company. The Massachusetts Rail-road Commissioners at once began an investi-

It became apparent in a short time that great frauds had been perpetrated upon Cook County by various business firms and contractors acting in conjunction with officials, who certified that the bills presented were all right. Generally speaking the frauds consisted in overcharges and in the purpless of large amounts of and in the purchase of large amounts of supplies, which never found their way into the institutions to which they were charged. When at the highest point the engine gave a sudden jerk, and plunged straight down to the abyss below. carrying all on board with it. Vincent and Busley were killed. Busley's head was severed and one leg off, and Vincent was cut in two. Conductor McCoy was pinned down by the heavy engine, and it was nearly an hour before he was taken out. In the meantime the escap-ing steam scalded his head, face, and body. He was probably fatally injured. Brakeman Stewart was terribly scalded, and there were but faint hopes of his recovery. Early, the passenger, had both legs broken, and was injured internally. A Schooner Wrecked-Three Lives

The schooner J. H. Eells went ashore near the Nauset (Mass.) life saving station a few days since. The station keeper, Captain Knowles, attempted to put off in a lifeboat, but the sea was so rough nothing could be done. Life lines were then fired to the vessel from the bluffs. Only three reached the schooner. The crew were so exhausted that they were unable to haul in the slack, and the lines were carried adrift by the undertow and broken. Nothing more could now be done, and work for the night was suspended. When morning dawned, of the five men seen the day before all had perished except two, who were in the foretop. They were rescued. They were the mate, John Olsen, and a seaman Andrew Anderson. The vessel was bound from New York to Boston.

THE physicians of the Polyclinic Hospital of New York have just removed a tumor from a young man's brain. The physicians before the operation learned that when two years old the young man had fallen from a fence and had a corn stalk driven through his skull. The hole, however, had in course of time filled up with bony matter. The young man had frequent fits, periods of hysteria, had developed paralytic symptoms and began to show a morbid suspicion of people. The physicians having decided that the trouble lay in the brain, learned of the accident in childhood, found the scar of the wound, placed the patient under the influence of ether, cut a piece out of the skull at the scar, found the tumor growing in the brain and removed it. In its center was a splinter of bone. The tumor was pear-shaped and two inches in diameter where widest. It took an hour to remove it.
